

Nebula

By

The Haiku Project, featuring Sarah Grabow

Written by

Steve Sheppard

There are many words of colour and description that could be used to describe the utter brilliance of Henrik Hytteballe compositions over the years. I was last entranced by his work on the album Glimpses and here as the Haiku Project, he does so again.

Hytteballe also employs the ethereal vocals of Sarah Grabow on this brand new release and in doing so manifests into our reality one of the finest new age albums of the year.

We can be amazed by the tones and energy of the title track Nebula and then left speechless by the sheer beauty of Breeze. The subtleness of production and performance here is incredible.

Nebula is one of those very rare albums you never want to end, each and every track is so very carefully crafted to bring us the eager listener the very best that can be offered, like the upbeat and empowering Earth, or the blissful ambience of Rain.

There is a certain lush sense of beauty within this latest release, one that you can simply float on, like the delicacy of the track Water, or the smooth and sensual nature of 5th Element.

If you're thinking about making Nebula part of your musical collection, don't think, just do it, your musical heart will love you forever. This is an album that will be as addictive as your next sunrise.