At one time of my life this would have been the perfect soundtrack for my emotional state, I had reached an impasse of the heart and needed to travel, I needed to be free and to run with the wind, to escape. Dillon's latest single captures that very energy for me; the slow but emotional build up to a huge crescendo is stunning. The powerful nature of this simply amazing single is sublime.

Dillon as a pianist is good, but employing the diverse nature of a multi instrumental base, he has created something here that is worthy of a film soundtrack. Fernweh: The Need to Travel highlights the incredible talents of Dillon the composer as much as the Dillon the musician, and the artist should be applauded for this moment of musical brilliance, this is a track to literally start your day with, music that is moving, yet deeply empowering.
