I have been lucky enough to review several singles now for Richard Dillon, and each time I do so I am struck dumb with the wonder of what I am listening to, surely he cannot get any better one might say, but that presumption would be vastly incorrect.

Alpha State of Mind rumbles in with a thunderstorm and then manifests a landscape so vast and wide, with the natural sounds perhaps of an ancient forest deep in a land far beyond the reaches of time.

To say this composition is descriptive would be doing it an injustice, it is a truly artistic arrangement, painted in notes and created with a descriptive ear that is so incredibly talented.

Alpha State of Mind at just short of nine minutes is one of the most addictive, but listenable singles I think I have heard to date.
