When I first came across this new single by Darla Bower I wasn't sure what to expect, the curious titles of Gentleman Bailey threw me slightly, but what is contained within must be one of the most beautiful slices of solo piano I have heard for months.

The performance of the keys is so tender and above anything else so descriptive, one could easily imagine walking down the dusty roadway depicted in the album art with ease, whilst nature's welcoming arms wave to either side of you in a dance of sublime natural beauty.

Darla Bower has manifested something simply idyllic here, my only complaint would be its not long enough at just over two minutes, but then again there is the repeat button.
